Open Lecture

Realism and Nationalism with Chinese Characteristics: Understanding Chinese Foreign Relations

Speaker: Dr. Wang Yi (Assistant Professor, Waseda University)

Date: 8:50 am to 11:20 am, Tuesday, January 19th, 2021

Place: Online (Zoom)

Dr. Wang Yi gave a talk on how particular political ideas, such as realism and nationalism, have shaped Chinese foreign relations. Despite the partly contradiction between the theories/ideologies of realism and nationalism, these two strands of ideas often mix together and dominate China's public discourse. This talk explored why realism and nationalism, rather than other alternatives, stay exceptionally popular in China and how they frame China's understanding of world politics.

Open Lecture

Communicating Artificial Intelligence

Speaker: Dr. Jasmine McNealy (Associate Professor, University of Florida)

Date: 10:10 am to 11:20 pm, Thursday, February 18, 2021

Place: Online (Zoom)

Artificial intelligence, machine learning, and decision systems need data. Unfortunately, many datasets are a result of surreptitious data collection that can have negative implications for the results of these systems. This talk examined surveillance and surreptitious data collection and its implications for AI and decision systems. In addition, this talk examined the role of communication and media in artificial intelligence and the policies being developed surrounding this emerging technology.

ICU-Sophia University International Symposium

The Korean War at 70:
the Unending War and its Lasting Spell

Date: December 18, 2020

Place: Online (Zoom Webinar)

Co-sponsors: Institute of Global Concern (IGC), Sophia University

Number of Participants: 101

Language: English and Japanese with simultaneous translation

As the year that marks the 70th anniversary of the break-out of the Korean War draws to an end, the symposium seeks to open an inquiry into the longevity of the war. Why is it that the war has continued for 70 years without an end but only with an armistice? Is it possible that it has been not only destructive but also productive? Is it possible that it has continued as it has engaged in a “gale of creative destruction”? Is it possible that not only did the war wreak havoc on the lives and environment on the peninsula and beyond but it also has produced long-lasting spell that still haunt the countries that are part of the war? Is it possible that their relationships and the regional order of Northeast Asia are still under its spell? This symposium brings together leading scholars of the war from around the world to analyze and discuss the war’s lasting legacies and ways to overcome them. It seeks to revisit the old war to shed light on the contemporary world spell-bound by a chain of events that started 70 years ago and has not ended.
